Question No.1 (Question Id - 2)

Given below are two statements :

Statement I :

W.F. Ogburn was one of the first to examine the phenomena systematically and to undertake quantitative studies of the rate of change, especially in the sphere of technological invention.

Statement II :

Herbert Spencer's theory of social change was in some respects less comprehensive, and was based less adequate empirical data, than that of August Comte.

Based on the above statements choose the correct answer from the options given below :

- (A) ☐ Both Statement I and Statement II are true
- (B) ☐ Both Statement I and Statement II are false
- (C) ☐ Statement I is true but Statement II is false (Correct Answer)
- (D) ☐ Statement I is false but Statement II is true

Question No.2 (Question Id - 81)

Who among the following defined power as "the chance of a man or a number of men to realize their own will in a social action even against the resistance of others who are participating in the action" ?

- (A) ☐ Karl Marx
- (B) ☐ Max Weber (Correct Answer)
- (C) ☐ Antonio Gramsci
- (D) ☐ Steven Lukes

- (D) ☐ Statement I is false but Statement II is true

Case Study - 36 to 37 (Question Id - 43)

Read the following text carefully and answer questions given below:

;Cultural capital can exist in three forms: in the embodied state, i.e., in the form of long-lasting dispositions of the mind and body; in the objectified state, in the form of cultural goods (pictures, books, dictionaries, instruments, machines, etc.), which are the trace or realization of theories or critiques of these theories, problematics, etc.; and in the institutionalized state, a form of objectification which must be set apart because, as will be seen in the case of educational qualifications, it confers entirely original properties on the cultural capital which it is presumed to guarantee. The reader should not be misled by the somewhat peremptory air which the effort at axiomization may give to my argument. The notion of cultural capital initially presented itself to me, in the course of research, as a theoretical hypothesis which made it possible to explain the unequal scholastic achievement of children originating from the different social classes by relating academic success, i.e., the specific profits which children from the different classes and class fractions can obtain in the academic market, to the distribution of cultural capital between the classes and class fractions.

This starting point implies a break with the presuppositions inherent both in the commonsense view, which sees academic success or failure as an effect of natural aptitudes, and in human capital theories. Economists might seem to deserve credit for explicitly raising the question of the relationship between the rates of profit on educational investment and on economic investment (and its evolution). But their measurement of the yield from scholastic investment takes account only of monetary investments and profits, or those directly convertible into money, such as the costs of schooling and the cash equivalent of time devoted to study; they are unable to explain the different proportions of their resources which different agents or different social classes allocate to economic investment and cultural investment because they fail to take systematic account of the structure of the differential chances of profit which the various markets offer these agents or classes as a function of the volume and the composition of their assets (see esp. Becker 1964b). Furthermore, because they neglect to relate scholastic investment strategies to the whole set of educational strategies and to the system of reproduction strategies, they inevitably, by a necessary paradox, let slip the best hidden and socially most determinant educational investment, namely, the domestic transmission of cultural capital. Their studies of the relationship between academic ability and academic investment show that they are unaware that ability or talent is itself the product of an investment of time and cultural capital (Becker 1964a, pp. 63-66). Not surprisingly, when endeavouring to evaluate the profits of scholastic investment, they can only consider the profitability of educational expenditure for society as a whole, the "social rate of return," or the "social gain of education as measured by its effects on national productivity" (Becker 1964b, pp. 121, 155). This typically functionalist definition of the functions of education ignores the contribution which the educational system makes to the reproduction of the social structure by sanctioning the hereditary transmission of cultural capital.

From the very beginning, a definition of human capital, despite its humanistic connotations, does not move beyond economism and ignores, inter alia, the fact that the scholastic yield from educational action depends on the cultural capital previously invested by the family. Moreover, the economic and social yield of the educational qualification depends on the social capital, again inherited, which can be used to back it up.

Question No.36 (Question Id - 44)

Why does author criticise economism ?

- (A) ☐ Economists fail to understand the value of capital investment.
- (B) ☐ Economists do make investments in scholastic enterprises.
- (C) ☐ They fail to appreciate how cultural capital is completely dependent upon the economic capital.
- (D) ☐ Economism fails to see the role of cultural capital in shaping educational achievements (Correct Answer)

Question No.37 (Question Id - 45)

What does the author mean by scholastic yields of cultural capital ?

- (A) ☐ Wisdom acquired through tradition.
- (B) ☐ Educational achievements of a class of people who have always been rich.
- (C) ☐ Ability to acquire high quality education because of the quality education that the earlier generations have in the family. (Correct Answer)
- (D) ☐ Money spent on financing education as a cultural value, which is generally not a practice among those who lack common-sense.

Question No.38 (Question Id - 23)

What is the relationship between Kinship and Gender ?

- (A) ☐ Gender and kinship are same
- (B) ☐ Kinship is not gender
- (C) ☐ Kinship regulates gender relations (Correct Answer)
- (D) ☐ Gender disrupts kinship relations

Question No.39 (Question Id - 69)

(B) ☐ Maurice Godelier
(C) ☐ GWF Hegel (Correct Answer)
(D) ☐ Karl Kautsky

Case Study - 46 to 50 (Question Id - 100)

Read the following paragraphs and answer five questions below :

It is indisputable that the concept of urbanism provides the essential theoretical basis of urban sociology. The term urbanism refers to a particular system of norms or values, or, at the level of actors, of behaviour, attitudes and beliefs. This system is the expression of a particular form of activity and social organization characterized by: a high degree of differentiation between individuals, social and personal isolation, role segmentation, superficiality and utilitarianism in social relations, functional specialization and the division of labour, the competitive spirit, a high level of mobility, the market economy, the predominance of secondary relations over primary, the shift from community to association, the subordination of the individual to organization, control of the political process by mass appeals, etc.

It is immediately clear that this does not constitute a theoretical definition but rather identifies a socio-cultural type; and this is even true of Wirth's rigorous formulation which remains the best statement of the urbanism thesis. Ultimately, urbanism is the cultural system corresponding to what is termed 'mass society'. Hence the phrases urban attitudes, urban behaviour, urban values, etc. And hence the definition of urban sociology's task as the study of the phenomena thus labelled. ....

The nub of the question lies elsewhere - in the fact that the presence of the term urban in the definition of urbanism is not accidental. One can accept initially the empiricist assertion: the new features did indeed first emerge in cities. Hence the term urban describes their place of emergence but does not define them. But the notion of urbanism implies much more than this. Implicitly or explicitly, there is an underlying theory which seeks to deduce urbanism from the ecological characteristics of cities, in other words, a theory 'of production of social forms. And, in particular, there is linked to it a theory of social change: the folk-urban continuum thesis. According to the latter, the history of humanity is the history of the movement from folk societies to urban societies, through a series of intermediate stages, impelled by transformations in the size, density and heterogeneity of the community. Urbanization thus becomes synonymous with modernization, and modern society equivalent to liberal capitalist society.

Thus the theory of urbanism is based on, and can be summarized in the form of, two theses: (1) 'modern' (i.e. capitalist industrial) societies have a distinctive cultural system. This system is the end point of the process of development of the human species. However, its establishment does not come about without difficulties so, in addition to defining its characteristics, one must study its diffusion and the 'resistance to change' of unintegrated sub-cultures. (2) This system is the product of a particular ecological form, namely the city. Society is transformed from rural to urban through the increase in size, density and heterogeneity of the territorial collectivities which constitute it. Once a certain level of development is reached, urban society exerts its influence and imposes its values even on rural settlements.

Rural and urban are two ends of a continuum. The varied situations observed empirically can all be placed on the continuum, and are all evolving from rural to urban.

The first thesis in our view must be subjected to thorough-going criticism: a discipline cannot take as its theoretical object a particular historical cultural type, unless it is defined as a final form which exists not only in one historical conjuncture but is implicit as a germ in other situations. To put it more clearly, for urbanism to be the specific theoretical object of urban sociology rather than merely the culture of liberal capitalist society, it would be necessary to identify it with modernity, and assume that all societies are moving towards it as they develop, despite secondary differences, e.g., those concerning their economic systems.

We are now in a position to describe the ideological significance of urban sociology. We have already referred to the emphasis placed on the study of social integration. While the scientific analysis of such a subject is quite unobjectionable, a discipline which restricts itself to the study of social integration to a particular culture - in this case the culture produced by capitalist industrialization - gives itself very limited scope for theoretical development.

As for the second thesis, the position is even clearer. The idea that a form of social organization (urbanism) could be produced by ecological changes represents too impoverished a vision of sociological theory to be seriously defended.

Wirth's attempt to demonstrate the specific links between size, density and heterogeneity, on the one hand, and urbanism, on the other, is, despite his intellectual ability, a collection of common-sense hypotheses lacking internal theoretical coherence. It can hardly be disputed that social organization and cultural system depend on something other than the number and diversity of individuals who constitute the society. Characteristics such as these must not be neglected, but rather must be incorporated into the technico-social structure underlying the organization of any society. Although this is not the moment to present a theory of production of these social forms, we nevertheless believe it possible to reject a view as simplistic as that which underlies the assertion that urbanism is the product of the 'city'.

Empirical studies have shown the existence of 'cities' with very diverse cultural systems. It is true that some writers go on to suggest restricting the term 'cities' to agglomerations in industrial societies, while others use the terms urbanization, modernization and 'Westernization' interchangeably. The differences between cities and countryside became blurred: Gottman has demonstrated the interpenetration of activities in these social forms. Hence the term urban diffusion!

If we move from general considerations to particular urban contexts and attempt to link types of behaviour with the particular ecological environment (e.g. the neighbourhood) in which they are observed, we find that multivariate analyses invariably come to the conclusion that it is social characteristics (individual or contextual) which are decisive influences on types of behaviour and that spatial proximity merely reinforces their effect.

The coincidence between certain characteristic types of behaviour and the constitution of large agglomerations in industrial society can often be misleading. In fact this is a typical case of spurious correlation. Transformations in the technico-social base of society lead both to new types of social relations and to a new form of spatial organization. The theoretical coherence of the process cannot be discovered by inter-relating the elements which co-exist on the surface of reality, but only by establishing the relations between structural elements through which this surface is itself organized. One might thus be inclined to accept the term urbanism to describe what happens in cities. But, on the other hand, as we have shown, the 'confusion' is not as innocent as it seems; it carries, implicitly, an ideology of the production of social forms. And, moreover, urbanism is not a theoretical object or specific concept which urban sociology could use to provide itself with a specific theoretical field.

Urbanism is not a concept. It is a myth in the strictest sense since it recounts, ideologically, the history of mankind. An urban sociology founded on urbanism is ideology of modernity ethnocentrically identified with the crystallization of the social forms of liberal capitalism.

Question No.46 (Question Id - 101)

What is the specific theoretical object of urban sociology as discussed in the above paragraphs ?

- (A) ☐ Urbanism is the central theoretical object
- (B) ☒ Urbanization is the central theoretical object (Correct Answer)
- (C) ☐ Urban design is the central theoretical object
- (D) ☐ Urban sociology has no specific theoretical object

Question No.47 (Question Id - 102)

According to the author, what is Louis Worth's theorization of urbanism ?

- (A) ☐ A relationship between urbanization and production of social forms
- (B) ☐ A collection of common-sense hypotheses lacking internal theoretical coherence
- (C) ☒ A process through which technico-social structure is infused with modernization (Correct Answer)
- (D) ☐ A synthesis of modernization, urbanization and westernization

Question No.48 (Question Id - 103)

According to the author, the theory of urbanism is based on which of the following (two) theses ?

- (A) ☐ Urbanism is a form of social organization; capitalist industrialization produces social integration
- (B) ☐ City is the product of capitalist industrialization; it has a technico-social base
- (C) ☐ Modern societies have a distinctive cultural system; city as an ecological form produced by it

Read the following passage given below and answer the following questions :

"We have now considered in detail the approved personalities of each sex among three primitive peoples. We found the Arapesh-both men and women-displaying a personality that, out of our historically limited preoccupations, we would call maternal in its parental aspects, and feminine in its sexual aspects. We found men, as well as women, trained to be co-operative, unaggressive, responsive to the needs and demands of others. We found no idea that sex was a powerful driving force either for men or for women. In marked contrast to these attitudes, we found among the Mundugumor that both men and women developed as ruthless, aggressive, positively sexed individuals, with the maternal cherishing aspects of personality at a minimum."

Question No.87 (Question Id - 59)

Read the following passage and answer the question listed below :

;"Indological discourse, I argue, holds (or simply assumes) that the essence of Indian civilization is just the opposite of the West's. It is the irrational (but rationalizable) institution of 'caste' and the Indological religion that accompanies it, Hinduism. Human agency in India is displaced by Indological discourse not onto a reified State or Market but onto a substantialized Caste. This has entailed several consequences for the Indological construction of India. It has necessitated the wholesale dismissal of Indian political institutions, and especially of kingship. To give this construct of India credibility, the depiction of Indian thought as inherently symbolic and mythical rather than rational and logical has also been required. Finally, it has been necessary for Brahmanism or Hinduism, the religion considered to be the justification of caste, to be characterized as essentially idealistic (i.e., apolitical).

Caste, conceived in this way as India's essential institution, has been both the cause and effect of India's low level of political and economic 'development' and of its repeated failure to prevent its conquest by outsiders. Given this, it was only 'natural' for European scholars, traders, and administrators to appropriate the power of Indians (not only the 'masses', but also the 'elite') to act for themselves. This they have done since the formation of Indological discourse made it possible. Despite India's acquisition of formal political independence, it has still not regained the power to know its own past and present apart from that discourse.

The fixation on caste as the essence of India has had still another effect. It has committed Indology, largely descended from British empiricism and utilitarianism, to a curious and contradictory mixture of societalism, in which Indian actions are attributed to social groups, caste, village, linguistic region, religion and joint family-because there are no individuals in India, and individualism, in which Indians' acts are attributed to bad motives.

What does author mean by societalism ?

- (A) ☐ Where individual attribute meaning of their action to social institutions such as caste and religion.
- (B) ☒ Where individuals are seen as being incapable of human agency or rational action and only social institutions such as caste and religion matter.
- (Correct Answer)
- (C) ☐ Where individuals feel proud of their social identities and avoid promoting individualism because that is seen as being a bad motive on the part of the individual.
- (D) ☐ Societalism is another name for British empiricism and utilitarianism.

Question No.89 (Question Id - 58)

Read the following statement and answer the question below :

;"Status refers to differences between social groups in the social honour or prestige they are accorded by others. In traditional societies, status was often determined on the basis of the first-hand knowledge of a person gained through multiple interactions in different contexts over a period of years. Yet as societies grew more complex, it became impossible for status always to be accorded in this way. Instead, status came to be expressed through people's styles of life. Markers and symbols of status - such as housing, dress, manner of speech and occupation - all help to shape an individual's Status often varies independently of class divisions."

Who is proponent of this formulation ?

- (A) ☐ Louis Dumont
- (B) ☒ Max Weber (Correct Answer)
- (C) ☐ Pierre Bourdieu
- (D) ☐ E.O. Wright

Question No.90 (Question Id - 75)

Read the following passage and the statements given below :

"Many sociologists working at the University of Chicago from the 1920s to the 1950s developed an approach to studying human social life that was similar to anthropological research in some key respects, though they often labeled it 'case study'. The 'Chicago School' was concerned with documenting the range of different patterns of life to be found in the city, and how these were shaped by the developing urban ecology. From the 1960s onwards, forms of sociological work influenced by these developments, especially by Chicago sociology, spread across many sub-fields of the discipline, and into other disciplines and areas of inquiry as well; and they also migrated from the United States to Europe and to other parts of the world. Furthermore, for a variety of reasons, an increasing number of anthropologists began to do research within Western societies, at first in rural areas but later in urban locales too. Another relevant development in the latter half of the twentieth century was the rise of cultural studies as an area of investigation distinct from, but overlapping with, anthropology and sociology. Work in this field moved from broadly historical and textual approaches to include the use of ethnographic method, notably in studying audiences and the whole issue of cultural consumption. Furthermore, in the later decades of the twentieth century, ethnography spread even further, for example into psychology and human geography. Indeed, it tended to get swallowed up in a general, multidisciplinary, movement promoting qualitative approaches."

Based on the above text, following are some statements :

- A. The 'Chicago School' of social research was concerned about documenting the patterns of life in cities.
- B. Studies on urban ecology from a sociological perspective were the contribution of the 'Chicago School'.
- C. Cultural studies as a discipline also adapted ethnographic methods apart from historical and textual approach to the study of culture.
- D. Ethnography did not find a place as a method in the disciplines of Psychology and Human Geography in the later decades of the Twentieth Century.
- E. The University of Chicago witnessed a trend of developing an approach in the first half of the 19th Century studying human social life in urban settings that was similar to anthropological research.

Question No.91 (Question Id - 40)

Read the following passage and the statements given below :

Edwin Ardener was among the first to recognize the significance of 'male bias' for the development of models of explanation in social anthropology. He proposed a theory of 'muted groups', in which he argued that the dominant groups in society generate and control the dominant modes of expression. Muted groups are silenced by the structures of dominance, and if they wish to express themselves they are forced to do so through the dominant modes of expression, the dominant ideologies any group which is silenced or rendered inarticulate in this way (gypsies, children, criminals) may be considered a 'muted group', and women are only one such case. According to Ardener, 'mutedness' is the product of the relations of dominance which exist between dominant and subdominant groups in society. His theory does not imply that the 'mute' should actually be silent, nor does it necessarily imply that they are neglected at the level of empirical research. Women may speak a great deal, their activities and responsibilities may be minutely observed by the ethnographer, as Ardener points out, but they remain 'muted' because their model of reality, their view of the world, cannot be realized or expressed using the terms of the dominant male model.

- A. The dominant groups in society generate and control the dominant modes of expression.
- B. Women, gypsies, children, criminals, in Ardener's scheme, constitute the 'muted groups' in most societies.
- C. Muted groups are the subordinated groups in society due to the working of dominant ideology.
- D. Women's view of the world, cannot be realized or expressed using the terms of the dominant male model.
- E. Edwin Ardener suggests that the 'mute' should actually be silent as a form of resistance,

Read the following passage given below and answer the following question :

;"Thus the first and basic ideal of ethnographic field-work is to give a clear and firm outline of the social constitution, and disentangle the laws and regularities of all cultural phenomena from the irrelevances. The firm skeleton of the tribal life has to be first ascertained. This ideal imposes in the first place the fundamental obligation of giving a complete survey of the phenomena, and not of picking out the sensational, the singular, still less the funny and quaint. The time when we could tolerate accounts presenting us the native as a distorted, childish caricature of a human being are gone. This picture is false, and like many other falsehoods, it has been killed by Science. The field Ethnographer has seriously and soberly to cover the full extent of the phenomena in each aspect of tribal culture studied, making no difference between what is common place, or drab, or ordinary, and what strikes him as astonishing and out-of-the-way. At the same time, the whole area of tribal culture in all its aspects has to be gone over in research. The consistency, the law and order which obtain within each aspect make also for joining them into one coherent whole. An Ethnographer who sets out to study only religion, or only technology, or only social organisation cuts out an artificial field for inquiry, and he will be seriously handicapped in his work."
