Read the following passage carefully and answer the question that follows:

An offshoot of the environmental movement of the 1970s, ecotourism has come into its own over the past two decades. Thanks to an increasing awareness of environmental issues combined with a high demand of travellers for unspoiled locations, authentic cultural experiences, and recreational challenges, ecotourism is growing at a rate of 20 percent annually, making it the fastest-growing sector in the tourist industry. Ecotourism is responsible travel to natural areas that conserve the environment and the welfare of local people.

Ecotourism's principles clearly distinguish it from conventional mass tourism. Tourists, businesses, and local residents are encouraged to minimize their impact on the environment by recycling materials, conserving energy and water, safely treating human waste and properly disposing of garbage, using alternative energy, and building in a manner that fits in with natural surroundings. The financial benefits from ecotourism are passed on to the community through conservation projects, employment, partnerships, and local participation in the development and management of local resources. Synonymous with "green" tourism, ecotourism promotes cultural sensitivity and respect for traditions and customs in order to avoid the kind of exploitation that has turned tribal ceremonies into sideshow and relics into souvenirs. Last but not least, ecotourism plays a political role in its support of human rights and democracy.

There is another side, however, to ecotourism. It is the least regulated industry with no universal standard or formal accreditation programs, any company can slap a "green" label and cash in on the trend. Developers and governments are particularly guilty of "greenwashing" projects that appear to be environmentally aware on the surface but destroy ecologically sensitive areas during large-scale construction. Although ecotourism has motivated governments to establish national parks and preserves, poorer countries cannot afford the costs of managing and either neglect them or turn to private investors, who may be committed to conservation or else work for their own gain.

Choose the correct interpretation for the following statement from the passage.

"Developers and government are particularly guilty of "greenwashing" projects that appear to be environmentally aware on the surface but destroy ecologically sensitive areas during large-scale construction."

1. Developers and governments are punished for destroying the environment.
2. Developers and governments clean up the environment.
3. Developers and governments use the term 'green' to make themselves appear environment friendly.
4. Developers and governments are guilty of destroying the environment by washing it with green colour.
