Passage	Read the given passage carefully and answer the questions that follow: Walking past St. Paul's Cathedral, on his first day in Calcutta, on August 20, 1995, Murugan was caught unaware by a monsoon downpour. He was on his way to the Presidency General Hospital, on Lower Circular Road, to look for the memorial dedicated to the British scientist Ronald Ross. He had seen pictures of it and knew exactly what to look for. It was an arch, built into the hospital's perimeter wall, near the site of Ross's old laboratory. It had a medallion with a portrait and an inscription that said: In the small laboratory seventy yards to the southeast of this gate, Surgeon-Major Ronald Ross I.M.S. in 1898 discovered the manner in which malaria is conveyed by mosquitoes. He hadn't far to go when the rain caught up with him. He felt the first drops on his baseball cap and turned to see an opaque wall of rain moving towards him, across the green expanse of the Maidan. He quickened his pace, swearing at himself for having left his umbrella behind at the guest house. The snack vendors at the Fine Arts Gallery, racing to cover their baskets with tarpaulin, stopped to stare as he trotted past, in his khaki suit and green baseball cap. He had packed an umbrella of course, a Cadillac of an umbrella, which opened at the touch of a button: he knew perfectly well what Calcutta was like at this time of year. But the umbrella was still in his suitcase, in the guest house on Robinson Street. He had been so eager to make his pilgrimage to Ross's memorial that he had forgotten to unpack it. Disappointed, he had to hail a cab back to his guesthouse.
